Use of differential-display PCR to isolate novel microRNAs expressed in microglia. miRNAs are non-coding RNA molecules that regulate mRNA expression at the post-transcriptional level, and have been implicated in almost all physiological and pathological processes, including human neurodegeneration. However, the number and exact functions of miRNAs in microglia are not yet known. To identify novel miRNAs expressed in microglia, the 3'-RACE technology was used to amplify the 3' end of the miRNA precursors in microglia. New miRNAs were identified by cloning the amplified products. The expression of 13 novel miRNAs, which have not yet been described, was confirmed by northern blotting. The direct target genes of four novel miRNAs were predicted using bioinformatics analysis. miR-2911 was identified as a downregulated miRNA in activated microglia. Functional studies showed that miR-2911 negatively regulates LPS-induced TNF- α mRNA and protein expression in BV2 cells. These data provide a basis for further studies on the role of miR-2911 in the neurobiology and therapy of neurodegenerative diseases.

Background: Numerous guidelines exist regarding the treatment of vulvar cancer. Yet, only few studies have implemented the use of the guidelines in routine clinical practice. The objective of our study was to evaluate the quality of treatment in vulvar cancer patients receiving chemotherapy and radiation therapy in routine clinical practice.

Methods: Data were collected retrospectively by combining data on chemotherapy and radiation therapy from a prospective database with data from a web-based quality assessment tool for all Dutch radiotherapy centers. This tool consists of a checklist of the quality indicators recommended by the Dutch guidelines for vulvar cancer. The number of adherence scores was registered per patient. A quality score was calculated by multiplying the percentage of adherence scores with the relevant quality score for each indicator 09e8f5149f
